

How does a fish swim?

Fish's tails push them through the water. Fish use their pectoral fins (the ones on the front sides of their bodies) to steer. The dorsal fins on fish's backs and the fins under their body, give them stability in the water. Fish have a balloon inside their bodies called a swim bladder. They add air into the swim bladder to rise in the water and remove air to sink.