

How KeyMe partnered with Dispatch to use customer experience as a differentiator

By using Dispatch, KeyMe was able to implement a new home-service business model, ensure locksmith compliance, and significantly improve the end customer experience - all through an out-of-the-box solution requiring little effort from their team.

The Opportunity:

KeyMe's self-service kiosks had a growing reputation in the consumer locksmith business. Providing quick services to people in their time of need, customers trusted the KeyMe brand.

Wanting to build on this reputation and increase their scale, KeyMe implemented home-service locksmithing, which provided several challenges for their business:

- Enabling their expansion via a network of independent locksmiths without an existing infrastructure to build on
- Understanding the performance of their locksmiths and ensuring compliance while keeping costs low
- Replicating the high levels of customer satisfaction delivered via KeyMe's locksmith kiosks
- Implementing a solution that met their rapid growth and expansion goals

KeyMe estimated that building a platform that satisfied their needs and delivered a customer experience worthy of their brand would take roughly 6-12 months, and decided to go with an existing solution that would enable faster implementation.

"It made more sense for us to use Dispatch instead of us building this internally, which would have required hiring a development team, design team, and investing in ongoing maintenance"
